Investors are hoodwinked by big financial firm conspirators into making bad investments.

Blurb:

For generations, Wall Street has bombarded investors with financial propaganda. We have been trained to make financial decisions on auto-pilot—decisions that benefit big financial firms not our investment portfolios. Glittery ads and seemingly sage advice steer investors toward mediocre returns and wrong-headed opinions about alternative and more profitable investments. It's time to take control of your money. The Wealth Conspiracy will rewire your thinking about investments, insurance and retirement.

About the author:

As a young boy, Curtis Hill was struck by the novelty of having his money work for him. He wanted to unlock the secrets of wealth management and help others to do the same. He eventually realized that dream, only to become disillusioned by an industry that was so self-serving, it forgot its primary mandate: to help others live in comfort and security. In The Wealth Conspiracy, Curtis rips the veil off the secrets Wall Street doesn't want you to know.

Curtis Hill holds two bachelor's degrees, a master degree, and has earned his Certified Financial Planner™ credential. He was a successful businessman and manager for fifteen years before turning to financial advising in 1994. He became a Sr. Vice President at one of the top three major brokerage firms. Curtis Hill's career is all about helping people achieve financial serenity.
